Winner Ian Briggs grimaces as he sees the final incline before the finish

This year there was no danger of the course being affected by snow and ice. It also stayed dry throughout and wasn't too cold. We were blessed, however, with a bracing breeze which helped keep runners from overheating, and made the climb up behind Bangour that bit more interesting.

Once again thanks are owed to all who stood at draughty corners, put out mile markers, recorded results, took photographs and otherwise generally supported things. We were all particularly grateful to John and Suse Coon and family who provided their home, heated the soup and helped everybody recover.

The 1994 handicap will once again be the Sunday before Xmas. It will also be the 10th one so perhaps we'll have to dream up something special!
